

Dear Kitchen Gardener,

As a gardener, I'd like to think that every year is a growth year but 2013's growth was something special for KGI. We grew our network, our programming, our budget and our impacts.

The highlight of the year was the launch of our Sow It Forward mini-grants and partnership program which helped support 80 inspiring food garden projects across the US and around the world. These included school gardens, community gardens, food bank gardens and many other types of garden projects serving vulnerable populations.

While we're pleased with our progress, we're not resting on our laurels. We know that much more work needs to be done to make kitchen gardens and healthy, garden-grown foods accessible to all and, thanks to our generous donors and our growing network, we're on course to do it!

Thanks for your support,

Roots Community Garden of Palatine, Illinois sows its garden grant forward between generations

“Community gardens often exist in areas that don't have a grocery store, where people don't have a lot of money and an understanding of nutrition might be scarce. Sow It Forward provides an infusion of knowledge and resources that empowers people to reach out to their neighbors and do something positive in such a way that the return on even a small amount of money is enormous.”
